RESEARCH EXPERIENCE

2006- Behavioral Prodromes in Migraine

2014 Department of Neurology, Kaiser Permanente

Investigated emotional, somatic, and behavioral prodromes that occur in migraine patients. Patients are all followed in the Department of Neurology. The aim of the study was to develop strategies for patients to identify migraine prodromes before the start of the headache.

2002- Coping with Vestibular Problems

2012 Department of Neurology, Kaiser Permanente

Examined how participation in a therapy program that combines Dialectical Behavior Therapy, cognitive behavioral techniques, and traditional vestibular rehabilitation affects patients with vestibular problems in terms of symptoms, coping, and physical/emotional functioning. This was a long-term project following the patients that participated in the Neurotology panel at Kaiser Permanente Santa Rosa. Findings suggested that participation improves patients' perception of coping and physical functioning and decreases utilization of emergency services and specialty clinics.

1993- Dissertation Project

1995 Louise F. Fitzgerald, Ph.D.

Department of Psychology, University of Illinois

Examined the links between elements in popular culture and rape myth acceptance. Specifically, utilized an information processing perspective to assess how romanticized violence in the cover image and texts of romance novels affects women's judgments about rape in legal situations. Data collection involved experimental priming of romance novel covers and written rape scenes, with follow-up questionnaires. As predicted, exposure to images and scenes that codify rape myths led to increased victim-blaming by participants.

1990-           Research Assistant
1991           Louise F. Fitzgerald, Ph.D.
                  Department of Psychology, University of Illinois

Project focused on romanticized violence and sex-role stereotyping in women's popular literature. Examined women's responses to reading "hero rapes", "villain rapes", consensual sex scenes, and gender-role stereotyping scenes in romance novels. Involvement included participant recruitment, collecting appropriate stimuli, and data collection. Also received training in forensic sexual harassment assessment and PTSD.

1990-           Master's Thesis Research
1991           Louise F. Fitzgerald, Ph.D.
                  Department of Psychology, University of Illinois

In this study, Undergraduate women were primed with either romance novel covers that codified rape myths or neutral comparison covers and then asked to make judgments about victims of rape in legal situations. As predicted, participants in the "rape myth" condition were more victim- blaming than comparison subjects, attributing greater responsibility to the victim for her being raped. Responsibilities included all phases of the research, including conceptualization, design, analyses, and write up.

1989-           Research Assistant
1991           Mark Aber, Ph.D.
                  Department of Psychology, University of Illinois

Projects on adolescent pregnancy, emotional and intellectual development of children, substance abuse prevention with "at risk" youth, and cultural/gender contributions to risk behaviors. Responsibilities included: (1) running focus groups with children (8-14 years old) from the Chicago area projects; (2) assisting in project conceptualization, design, data collection, coding, scoring, and analysis; (3) presenting mentoring workshops to the Chicago area project facilitators; (4) translating various project materials to Spanish for Spanish-speaking participants
